

Debut film – premiere on documentary film festival in Germany

For the first time after completion of the debut film “The Timebank – an economy for everyone” in February 2007, the reception of international awards and great success in worldwide distribution (TV and DVD market as well as through different online platforms), a German festival committee has now also recognized the actuality and quality of this documentary.

“The Timebank” by Steffen Söhner will be screened during the all English speaking Globians world & culture Documentary Film Festival, taking place in Potsdam, Germany from 8th till 17th August. Some selected films will then be shown again in Berlin from 1st till 8th of September.

Globians Film Festival is indeed not one of the big and international well-known documentary film festivals, but distinguishes itself for its independence. Documentaries just as “The Timebank” are of highest quality, but due to their difficult theme they are more niche than mass products. And that’s what the jury of Globians Film Festival is really looking for. Always critical and so open for films that are not only focusing one-sided on economic and ecological destruction, but beyond of that also revealing (new) ways to overcome such global and negative developments in terms of economy and ecology, as well as politics and society.

Once again it becomes apparent that the documentary of the author and filmmaker Steffen Söhner is dealing with an up-to-date topic. And because of producing such high quality films, he actually receives adequate recognition from the film industry. This of course opens the doors for further success.
